A light silvery blue

This silvery blue was so named because it was the lightest blue Farrow & Ball made in its first collection of colours. Light Blue becomes a little more silver in tone when used in shaded areas so is very popular for use on the walls of internal halls, especially when the remainder of the house is painted in cooler, more neutral greys. When used in well lit areas it feels both peaceful and calming, especially when paired with a cool white like Blackened.

Son's bedroom makeover @theoldforgecottage

We wanted a warm blue for this project but didn't want to go too dark as a cottage bedroom with low ceiling and a small window. We had previously panelled the walls and found the perfect warm shade in light blue, it went on so well and never disappointed in the quality of paint. The room feels very cosy and love the way it changes with the light in the room.

A stunning transformation

We used Light Blue in our son's bedroom in our new home. The walls were not in a great condition so we fixed up whatever we could. The primer gave off a sheen showing every little imperfection; I was dreading the painting as I thought we had wasted so much time plastering, filling, sanding etc. that the finish would just look rubbish. Boy was I wrong, the Dead Flat finish covered up everything and the walls look impeccable. The colour is just stunning. I can't stop going into his room at different times of the day just to admire the stunning, I can't stop going into his room at different times of the day just to admire the various shades. We had been recommended 5l for the size of the bedroom so now we're stuck with 2.5l left over as the paint went on so well with just two coats. We are extremely happy with the result!
